The ambulance took Ryan to St. Mary's Hospital, where, when Drs. Reynolds and Mconey began to look for his wounds, he gasped and said, scarcely above a whisper:

"I am dying. Say good-by to my wife and children. God help me."

Ryan closed his eyes and appeared to pass quictly away. The doctors noticed, however, that there were no visible signs of blood on the man's face or clothes. They forced his mouth open and could find no signs of bullet wounds. A careful examination revealed the fact that his heart was beating in a rapid, healthy condition. Kearney was a very careful man, and had been acting as watchman for a long time. There was no reason why be should have fallen overboard by accident, and the theory of suicide is scouted by his relatives. There is also no reason to believe that he ran away, for the man's domestic life was very pleasant.

There is a very had gang that hangs about the docks along the river, and Kearney was known to always carry money with him. Besides this, he had a gold watch which he was always proud of displaying, and this alone might have been a temptation to any of the hard citizens in the vicinity.

Kearney was all alone on the dock during the lonely hours of the night, and its would have been eatnecked suddenly, overpowered, robbed and thrown into the river.

The police are working on the case, but up to date have not successed in unraveling the mystery.

Tighe, in the Butler Street Court, Brooklyn, this morning for examination on the charge of lounging.

McGinn and Coyle, it is alleged, were engaged in pushing the boycott against the products of the Budweiser Brewing Company. Their cases are similar to that of Richard Butler, who was discharged on a writ of habeas corpus on Friday last, at which time Justice Gaynor took occasion to severely criticise the Brooklyn police and Police Justices for arresting and holding men on such a trivial charge as lounging.

McGinn and Coyle were promptly discharged this morning.

Ten more strikers and their friends will be arraigned and discharged Wednesday.

Justice Gaynor's remarks on Friday have not ceased to have their effect. Police Commissioner Welles called all the police captains to Police Headquarters and Justice Gaynor's decision was read to them.

ark Methodist Episcopal Conference will be ended to-morrow afternoon. All of the important work of the Conference remains to be done, and, with only a day and a half to do it in, extra sessions must be held.

The terms of six years of two of the Presiding Elders have expired. They are Rev. Dr. S. H. Hammond, of the Paterson district, and Rev. Dr. S. Van Benschoten, of the Newark district. These gentlemen would like to succeed each other, but it is said that Mr. Hammond will become the Presiding Elder of the Newark district, and that his place will be taken by Rev. L. C. Benscholen will be heard in the Consionary.

Liberty Depends Upon the Sancity

NEWARK, N. J., April 9.-Julius Har burger, Grand Master of the Independent Order Free Sons of Israel, addressed a large gathering of the members and at the Young Men's Hebrew Association Hall, in Plane street, last night. Speaking of liberty and independence, he said especially in New York City, the monstrous ballot-box frauds, illegal regis trations, wholesale and fraudulent vot ing, intimidations that have been un ing, intimidations that have been unearthed, would, if not discovered in time, have imperilled the futurity and safety of our great Republic. Judges were forement in the Israelitish days, and the government of the people was in their hands. Our Judges in our country can also be mainly relied upon. The evil-doers were speedly brought to justice and deservedly punished. The ones ali-powerful as well as the minions, were taught the lessons of Jefferson, that 'God, who gave us life, gave us liberty at the same time.'

"Woe to any party which countenances fraud upon the ballet-box or against the suffrages of the people. Such an organization is short lived and will not be tolerated by the people."
